Do you remember your 9-year-old childhood DREAMS? Most of us don't. This is the story of an exceptionally, talented, creative, tenacious young girl that never forgot or gave up on her 9-year-old DREAMS. We're all born for certain destinies and purposes in life and many of us fight against those destinies and search for all the things we "think" we should do or want to be. But Missouri is one of the lucky ones because she has known her destiny all of her life. She knew early on what to embrace and what to dismiss in order to reach her dreams, her goals, her passions and her purpose. But for so long, life just kept throwing obstacles in her path. At times, many of those obstacles seemed insurmountable but the visions of her 9-year-old self, watching her mother sew, kept her on her path. While at the knee of her mother, she collected scraps of fabric and built a make shift fashion runway, all the while making a commitment to someday become a major force in the fashion world. That vision, that promise and that commitment became central to her being. The one thread that had been consistent in her life was still with her. That 9-year-old vision was clearer and stronger than ever.

Born in Newark, New Jersey, to Queen Ada Ann Watson Hood, Missouri is the third youngest of seven siblings. She is the mother of four wonderful children who are the wind beneath her wings, and a very proud grandmother and great grandmother, aka, Nana. Just as she was coming out of the depths of her valleys of losing everything, she was hit with the worst trauma of her life, BREAST CANCER.
